LIGHTWEIGHT CHAMPIONS.

Lightweight champions were not classified to any extent until the early 80's, when Jack McAuliffe, Billy Frasier, George Fulljames, Harry Gilmore and others began to figure as 128 to 133 pounders. There were no recognized lightweight champions, as a class, in England, previous to the 70's, although claims were made by the stars in both countries. At least we fail to find records of such. About the first champion in America was Abe Hicken, who claimed the title, and defeated Pete McGuire in five rounds, December 23, 1868, at Perryville, Md. It is presumed that Hicken retired and the title lapsed.

Joe Collyer of England claimed the title about this time, as did Billy Edwards and Arthur Chambers for America. Edwards defeated Collyer and then Arthur Chambers, and Edwards fought for the title September 4, 1872, at Whirlpool Island, St. Clair river, Canada, Chambers winning on a foul in thirty-five rounds.

March 27, 1879—Arthur Chambers defeated Johnny H. Clark at Chippewa Falls, Canada, 136 rounds, for title and belt, bare knuckles. Weight, 133 ringside.

Charlie Norton claimed the title and was to have met George Fulljames, but the match fell through. Norton did not defend the title.

There was another lapse of the title as Chambers retired. In 1884-5 Jack Dempsey became the recognized king of lightweights, having beaten such men as Jimmy Mitchell, George Fulljames, Tom Henry, Billy Dacey, Bob Trumbull, Jack Keenan, Jimmy Murray, and Bill Frasier, but he advanced into the welterweight class and later into the middleweight class.
